Airing™

The world's first hoseless, maskless, cordless micro-CPAP device to treat sleep apnea.

We are beyond excited to announce that we've begun the initial functional testing of our micro-blower prototypes and it's official; they are moving air. Yes, for just a brief moment, we are pausing to appreciate the progress we've made in the Airing lab.

In our last update, we explained that we were gearing up to begin bench testing the fully-constructed components of the micro-blower prototype. We can now share with you the results of that testing: that our pump membranes are successfully displacing air in and out of the micro-blower bodies. With this, we have crossed a major milestone in the construction of our proof of concept prototype and can now shift our complete attention to controlling this airflow and building a net pressure.

As you may have seen in our technology video, each of the Airing device's displacement pumps (micro-blowers) will be operated with opposing electrostatic charges in order to repeatedly expand and collapse, pushing out a powerful stream of air. Pumping thousands of times a second and assembled in parallel within the device, these units will work together to achieve the flow rate required to maintain positive airway pressure. While we have a lot of work to do before we can begin testing pressure, we're proud to have met this important milestone and are eager to forge ahead in prototyping our proof of concept.

To celebrate this achievement, as well as the one-year anniversary of our crowdfunding launch on Indiegogo, we will be bringing back the most popular perk from our launch: the secret “Platinum + 90 Airings” perk for \$98. This deal will only be available to you, our email subscriber community, and will only last for 48 hours, starting tomorrow, Tuesday, June 14th, at 4 PM \(EDT\). We will be sending you a link to the perk and all the necessary details to claim it on Tuesday.

And now, back to work at the Airing lab!

All the Best,
